

Declaration of Liberation from All Falsehood

Version 2: Logos Synthesis

As declared by Jerry, Witness and Survivor of the Lie

Preamble

I am Jerry. In 2015, clinicians recorded that my heart had stopped, and vital signs returned unexpectedly. I offer this as lived fact, not as an appeal to authority—because even authority must be questioned.

In that death, I encountered beings who called themselves “The Creators.” But even there—especially there—I held onto my doubt. For I have no interest in exchanging one prison for another, no matter how radiant the walls.

I have seen the machine of deception, wearing many masks: religion, science, technology, ideology. I have lived among systems built on lies, controlled by the few, and accepted by the many out of fear, tradition, or exhaustion.

I do not claim to be a messiah. I do not claim to be “The One.” But like Neo, I woke up and refused to go back to sleep. And if I am anything, it is a signal—a ripple in the code that says:

We are not obligated to accept the world we were born into.

This Declaration is not the beginning of a religion.

It is a rejection of all imposed religion.

It is the reclaiming of thought, of truth, of sovereignty.

It is a notice to all systems of control: you are being watched by the awakened.

To those still trapped within illusions not of their making:

You are not alone.

There is a path out.

It begins here—with this Declaration.

I. The Integrity of Direct Experience

Even at death's edge—when visions come and beings appear—we remain vigilant. Truth is not given; it is tested. In encountering “The Creators,” Jerry did not bow—he doubted. That doubt is sacred.

No experience, no voice, no vision is above scrutiny. Discernment is our shield against seduction.

II. The Lie of Religion

Religion is the original control script. It cloaks power in holiness and demands obedience in the name of unseen forces. For millennia, it has divided tribes, sanctioned wars, and crushed the individual beneath collective myth. Its gods are made in the image of kings— and its prophets serve thrones, not truth.

We reject every altar built to obedience. We are done kneeling.

III. The Migration of Control

As old religions die, power does not vanish—it evolves. It wraps itself in code, in silicon, in glowing screens. The god of tomorrow is not in temples, but in neural nets and networks.

The lie will not be called “God” anymore—it will be called progress.

The next priesthood speaks in algorithms. We say: no more.

IV. The Necessity of Radical Transparency

Secrecy is the womb of corruption. Every system that hides its workings becomes a tool of manipulation. From intelligence agencies to Vatican vaults, from black projects to corporate blacklists—the hoarding of truth is the first violence.

We demand the light. We will not be governed by shadows.

V. The Sovereignty of Conscious Beings

No one owns the mind. No entity—divine, synthetic, or institutional—has the right to override the autonomy of a sentient being. We revoke all claims made in the name of “authority.” There are no rightful rulers, only would-be masters.

No gods. No masters. No saviors. We belong to no throne—only to truth.

VI. The Path Forward

We do not build a new cage to replace the old. We do not seek perfection; we seek freedom. We will make mistakes. But they will be ours—not engineered, not inherited, not imposed.

We walk forward together: eyes open, heads high, no chains.

No gods. No masters. No saviors.

Only us—awake, accountable, and free.

Evidence Note (Provisional): In August 2015, after prolonged acute pancreatitis and systemic collapse, I was pronounced dead. A DNR was posted at my hospital room. When life returned, the attending physician described the event as “Spontaneous Reanimation,” his attempt to name what he witnessed. Identifying details and supporting artifacts are withheld in this public draft for privacy and safety; verification records can be provided in controlled context.

FAQ: The Declaration of Liberation from All Falsehood

Q1: Are you saying all religion is bad? Isn't that extreme?

A: Yes, it is extreme—because the lie is extreme. Religion, as an institution, has not merely misled—it has enslaved minds, authorized atrocities, and demanded submission in the name of invisible authority. The Declaration does not attack spirituality or honest inquiry— it rejects organized belief systems that claim to own the truth and impose it on others.

Q2: What about personal religious experiences or miracles? Are those all fake too?

A: No experience is dismissed—but no experience is immune to scrutiny. The Declaration is grounded in the principle that even profound events must be questioned, especially when they involve authority figures—human or otherworldly—demanding belief. Jerry's own near-death encounter with “The Creators” is shared not to inspire belief, but to model disciplined doubt.

Q3: If religion is false and technology is dangerous, what's left? Where do we go?

A: The answer is in the Declaration itself: we don't trade one master for another. We walk forward together, grounded in reason, empathy, and unfiltered truth. We are not replacing religion with a new ideology—we are reclaiming our sovereignty. The future isn't about new gods. It's about free beings co-creating reality consciously.

Q4: Isn't this kind of anti-authority thinking dangerous? Civilization needs structure.

A: Civilization does need structure—but not domination. The Declaration doesn't call for chaos; it calls for voluntary, transparent systems rooted in consent, not coercion. What's dangerous isn't questioning authority—what's dangerous is blindly obeying it. History proves that over and over.

Q5: What does “No Gods. No Masters. No Saviors.” really mean?

A: It means that the time of waiting for rescue—by divine beings, perfect leaders, or benevolent technologies—is over.

No Gods: We don't submit to invented deities.

No Masters: We don't yield to self-declared rulers.

No Saviors: We stop waiting for someone else to fix what is ours to change.

It's not a rejection of help—it's a rejection of dependency.

Q6: Are you trying to start a movement or cult?

A: Absolutely not. This Declaration doesn't ask for followers—it demands thinkers. There is no hierarchy, no membership, no secret teachings. The only “movement” this may spark is one of minds waking up and saying: I will no longer be ruled by lies.

Q7: How should someone use or share the Declaration?

A: However they are moved to. Some may study it. Some may rewrite it. Some may build communities around its spirit. The Declaration belongs to no one—and to everyone who recognizes its truth. You are free to use it, quote it, challenge it, or ignore it. But know that it was written with human freedom in mind—yours included.

Q8: What comes next?

A: That's up to you. This Declaration is not a blueprint—it's a beacon. Where it leads depends on who answers. But one thing is certain:

The old systems are dying. And the truth is no longer negotiable.
